

BUSH: THERE'S NO BETTER WAY TO STAY IN TOUCH THAN THROUGH E-MAIL

This is funny on so many levels (h/t TP).

President Bush reveals that when he finally leaves the White House, the first thing he'll do is resume E-mailing his buddies. "I can remember as governor, I could stay in touch with all kinds of people around the country firing off E-mails at all times of the day to stay in touch with my pals," he says in a Yahoo-Politico interview. "One of the things that I will have ended my public service time with is a group of friends, a lot of friends, and I want to stay in touch with them, and there's no better way to stay in touch with them than through E-mail."

First, is the President suggesting he's been forgoing the best way to stay in touch for the last seven years?

Second, who do you suppose will go through and delete massive amounts of Bush's emails in the future? Pickles?

Finally, this means we can look forward to a collection of Bush's personal emails to be published in about 2050. I'm placing my bets that that will be the humor book of the year the year it does get published.

Maybe Bush will start blogging after he's done, too.
