

HOURS AFTER DONALD TRUMP WITNESS TAMPERED IN REAL TIME, ROGER STONE FOUND GUILTY OF THE SAME CRIME

In the middle of today's impeachment testimony from Marie Yovanovitch Trump lost control of his emotions and attacked the witness.

Adam Schiff interrupted committee counsel Dan Goldman's questioning, read Yovanovitch the tweet, and asked her how it made her feel.

Yovanovitch said it made her feel intimidated.

Schiff, a former federal prosecutor, knows how to substantiate a witness tampering charge. Even Bret Baier recognized this as such.

During the break in Yovanovitch's testimony, the jury in Roger Stone's trial came back with a verdict. They found him guilty on all seven counts. That includes a witness tampering charge for Stone's efforts to dissuade Randy Credico from testifying before the House Intelligence Committee, the very same committee leading this impeachment hearing.

The courts are just now imposing consequences for Trump's efforts to cheat to win the 2016 election, even as he attempts to prevent the one court that can try him for imposing consequences for cheating to win the 2020 election.