

LORDY, THERE ARE [TRANSCRIBED] TAPES

ABC News reports that among the things Beryl Howell ordered Trump's lawyer, Evan Corcoran, to turn over were "transcriptions of personal audio recordings" involving his representation of Donald Trump.

Sources added that Howell also ordered Corcoran to hand over a number of records tied to what Howell described as Trump's alleged "criminal scheme," echoing prosecutors. Those records include handwritten notes, invoices, and transcriptions of personal audio recordings.

It also reported that Howell ordered Jennifer Little, an Atlanta attorney who signed a big challenge to Fani Willis' investigation into Trump's attempts to cheat in Georgia, to testify further as well.

Sources told ABC News that Howell ordered Little's testimony as well, with the exception of one of the topics for which she sought to assert attorney-client privilege.

CNN reports that Trump is appealing this decision.