

MUKASEY, ORWELL, AND BRADBURY

Keith Olbermann notes, with great dismay, that Michael Mukasey chose to hang a portrait of George Orwell in his office (the other portrait is Chief Justice Robert Jackson, which makes me quite happy). I'm willing to take Mukasey's word that he admires Orwell for his writing (and his thoughts on language). Yet I don't know how to square that with Mukasey's endorsement of the Bradbury renomination.
