

RUSLAN STOYANOV AND TWO DEGREES OF SEPARATION FROM PROTECTED CRIMINAL HACKERS

The former Kaspersky head of cyber investigations now facing treason charges in Russia, Ruslan Stoyanov, made a splash yesterday accusing Russia of protecting criminal hackers in exchange for state-related hacking. There's just one problem with that: the US has accused Dmitry Dokuchaev, whose arrest is believed to be tied to Stoyanov's, of doing just that.